Equality 7-2521 is a young man who wants to understand the Science of Things. But he lives in a dystopian, bleak future where independent thought is a crime and where science and technology regress to primitive levels. All manifestations of individualism were suppressed in the world of the hymn; personal belongings do not exist, individual preferences are condemned as sinful, and romantic love is forbidden. Obedience to the collective is so deeply ingrained that the word me was erased from the language. In pursuit of his pursuit of knowledge, Equality 7-2521 struggles to answer the questions that burn within him - questions that ultimately lead him to uncover the mystery of his society's decline and find the key to the future of freedom and progress. The anthem pre-empts the theme of Rand's first bestseller, Fountainhead, which she stated as individualism against collectivism, not in politics but in the soul of man. Modern texts: Oh, tell me, please can you see what we are looking for in the light of dawn? The flag we saw at the last light of yesterday, with its wide stripes and bright stars, which through all the danger of battle We could still see over the walls of the fort, waving so gallantly in the wind, and all night, rockets and bombs illuminating the sky, telling us what we needed to know - that our flag was still flying there. But please tell me, is the star a spangled banner one that still waves, above ground free, and the house of the brave? Brave?
